S. B. Preston House
Knoxville
Private

1850

The S. B. Preston House is significant to Knoxville architecturally as one of the stone buildings of the town and as one of the buildings which made up Knoxville in the mid nineteenth century.

In 1858 the house was as it is today strategically placed at the base of the hill leading into town on the Harpers Ferry Road. Its rear yard backs up to the B & O Railroad and before the 1889 flood would have overlooked the rest of the town of Knoxville.

In 1873 the house was owned by S. B. Preston as indicated by the Titus Atlas, however since his name is indicated on other properties in the town it is unlikely that he actually lived in the building.

The house is architecturally significant for its fine random stone construction banked against a hill. Except for the addition of a false front gable in the late nineteenth century and removal of a front porch the house has remained relatively unchanged since its mid nineteenth century construction.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The S. B. Preston House is a two story flank gable roofed coursed random stone residence which faces east at the base of Route 180 (Jefferson Pike) in Knoxville.

The principal facade is four bays wide. There are two main entrances to the building which are located in the second and third bays. Both entrance doors have been replaced. A three horizontal panel door with single upper light is located in the second bay. A modern four panel door with small lights in the top part of the door is located in the third bay.

Occupying the remaining bays on the first level and all bays on the second level are original double hung 6/6 windows with beaded edge and wood lintels.

A small false front gable, added in the late nineteenth century, covered with decorative wood butt and fishscale shingling, extends in the center of the roof directly over the second and third bays.

Ghostings on the front first level of the building indicate that a hip roofed porch has been removed.

One small square replaced window is located in the north and south gable ends. A vertical board cellar entrance is located in the northwest corner.

The entire building is banked against a hill facing the town of Knoxville. The rear of the building is backed against the B & O Railroad line and once overlooking the remaining part of the town located on the opposite side of the tracks.

The house is constructed on a banked coursed random stone foundation and is covered by a flank gable patterned slate roof with boxed cornice, plain frieze and return. One original twin interior brick chimney straddles the gable on the south end wall.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The S. B. Preston House is significant to Knoxville architecturally as one of the stone buildings of the town and as one of the buildings which made up Knoxville in the mid nineteenth century.

Today the S. B. Preston House stands on land known as the Cooper's Addition to Knoxville platted in 1921 by Charles and Ellen Cooper.¹

In 1858 the house was as it is today strategically placed at the base of the hill leading into town on the Harpers Ferry Road. Its rear yard backs up to the B & O Railroad and before the 1889 flood would have overlooked the rest of the town of Knoxville.

In 1873 the house was owned by S. B. Preston as indicated by the Titus Atlas, however since his name is indicated on other properties in the town it is unlikely that he actually lived in the building.

The house is architecturally significant for its fine random stone construction banked against a hill. Except for the addition of a false front gable in the late nineteenth century and removal of a front porch the house has remained relatively unchanged since its mid nineteenth century construction.
